

Drivers and feedback loops of the triple planetary crisis

Human activities such as deforestation, fossil fuel use, overconsumption, and resource exploitation drive climate change, biodiversity loss, and pollution. These crises interact through reinforcing feedback loops that amplify risks, leading to ecosystem degradation, reduced food and water security, economic losses, and impacts on human health and social stability.

